Hi,

I object to this proposal, purely because it is too short. A building in the middle downtown Sydney should be at the very least 200m. I mean, unless you want to increase the height limits in Surry Hills and Haymarket, we're going to run out of space for office towers soon! The design is okay, could be a little more adventurous, but it needs an additional 40 floors. Lets face it, this isn't a good development if it is not pushing height limits and making the most of scarce space in the CBD. It will also promote Sydney as a power house for big business if we can show off our lovely skycrapers!

Politely objecting,
Dylan Jardine

I write in support of the project. I make the following comments in regards to my support:

1. This is a key location for the CBD that needs a significant development such as this to enhance the precinct.
2. It is a real shame that the development does not seek to extend in height to a significantly taller structure so that we can have more landmark buildings in the CBD to attract further international business/investment to the city. In the current environment cities like Brisbane and Melbourne are building 80+ storey buildings and will eventually take away a lot of Sydney's iconic presence, not to mention other nearby cities such as Hong Kong. This is a landmark site and should be fit for a landmark building of a grand scale.
